All I know of Margit Hinke is what I find here in this „book.“

Here is a world in which there is only Margit Hinke, a person of unknown age, height, weight, income, social background, disposition, moral character, political or sexual preference.

Thus, it is a world about which I know none of the essential things I know about my world.

It is a world where everything has been reduced to a few questions that become more evocative and troubling with each image and scrap: Who is Margit Hinke? What is it really like to be Margit Hinke? If Margit Hinke could speak, what would she say and how would it sound?

And finally, how would it feel to kiss the central feature of Margit Hinke's world: Margit Hinke's lips.

Such questions echo silently around the giant, expanding room that is the Margit Hinke part of my mind.
