In 1801 MIDDLESBROUGH was a small farming hamlet with a population of 25. In 1828 Joseph Pease and fellow Quakers bought 527 acres of land described as a 'dismal swamp' and established the Middlesbrough Estate Company. In 1830 they chose the Latin word erimus—"we shall be" to signify their ambition to expand. Today, the population is 142, 400. In a second wave of erimus, Teesside University—under the leadership of Vice Chancellor Professor Graham Henderson CBE—has added six new buildings to the campus creating a further 23,770m² of academic space and increasing the number of students from 19,228 to 28,780, culminating in being named University of the Year in the Times Higher Education Awards in 2009.
